

Witch Store

Contributed by Clair Andropov
Saturday, 17 June 2006
Last Updated Saturday, 29 July 2006

Many people would never consider visiting a witch store whether in person or online but there are some quality items and interesting merchandise you could be missing out on if you forgo the mystical store. Perhaps part of the stigma lies in our perception of witchcraft in general. It is important to remember that society's perception is not always the clearest and it may not hold much truth, either.

The perception of witches as being associated with the dark side is one that is dispelled (if you will excuse the pun) by many of today's witches. Of course, there are some good and some bad elements to be aware of. Not all witches are associated with satanic rituals but keep in mind that some are. Today's witch store often contains items associated with the "good witches" who are simply in tune with nature. These individuals celebrate the earth and its elements in unusual ways. They embrace nature and engage in ceremonies that are designed to promote health, happiness and well-being. Some refer to these witch stores as "new age" shops as well. The other type of witch store contains items directly related to satanic ceremonies. Daggers and pentagrams are common to these shops as are a variety of other unsettling objects. It takes little time to get a vibe from the negative shop and it takes little time to get a vibe from the positive as well. You will be able to tell which witch store you have entered almost immediately. Many shoppers are not willing to take such a risk. Some people simply want to buy incense and lotions not spells and potions. The savvy shopper who wants to remain anonymous and safe in her witch store purchases is best suited to shop on the Internet. This practically risk-free endeavor takes you no farther than your computer screen. Items shipped from a witch store are mostly sent discreetly, too for anyone who does not want her nosy neighbor starting gossip. So what does a normal person buy at a witch store? She mostly buys things closely tied to nature. These objects are designed to promote well-being and happiness through using the powers of Mother Earth. Many like to buy oils that work on our superstitious natures. You can purchase money oil, love oil and beauty oil to name just a few. Even if the oils from the witch store don't work, you will still wind up smelling wonderful in the long run. Candles are another popular item offered in this kind of store. You can find a number of healing ointments and lotions, teas and various other items as well. Finding a nice witch store for good witches can be a good deal of fun.